Do you need a warehouse audit?

Eight signs your operation is ready for one. Read each statement and mark yes or no, honestly. There are no right answers, only useful ones.

1. Inventory accuracy is a guess. Yes ☐ No ☐
You could not state your true inventory accuracy today, or the last cycle count disagreed with the system often enough to be embarrassing.

2. Stockouts and overstock coexist. Yes ☐ No ☐
Fill rate complaints arrive while working capital in slow stock keeps climbing.

3. Overtime is structural. Yes ☐ No ☐
The operation only makes its cutoff times with routine overtime or temp labour, even at normal volumes.

4. Slotting has not been revisited in a year or more. Yes ☐ No ☐
Fast movers are not where the pickers need them. Travel distance is set by history, not velocity.

5. Nobody owns the KPIs. Yes ☐ No ☐
OTIF, fill rate, dock to stock time and lines picked per hour are not measured, or measured but never compared to a baseline.

6. The process lives in people's heads. Yes ☐ No ☐
Reorder points, put away logic and dispatch rules depend on specific individuals. A departure would take the system with them.

7. Growth or change is coming. Yes ☐ No ☐
A move, a new channel, ecommerce fulfilment, a WMS decision or a 3PL change within the next year, on top of an operation that already strains.

8. The last project's gains are slipping. Yes ☐ No ☐
A WMS go live, a layout change or a new process delivered improvement that has quietly eroded since.

If you answered yes to any of these, a short audit will show you what it is costing and where to start. The first audit conversation is free, and there is no obligation after it.
